Dear Parent,

I have some concerns over a discussion that was held in class last week. I have heard from a few parents about this discussion and it leads me to believe it was misinterpreted. This was a religion lesson and when we discussed what was going on in the story we read, a few of the students admitted to feelings of being left out. This topic was then discussed in more depth in terms of how we can help others feel welcome in our Christian community. I hope that all talk about this will stop and that we realize that the children are looking to us for direction. Our role modeling of Christian values is crucial for children of this age.
